

LICENCE TO THRILL:
Unleash your inner 007
with the vertiginous
R200 Water Jetpack

PLAYTIME

Dip into Tony Stark's toolbox and supplement the luxury yacht with gung-ho gadgets and tidal transport befitting a super-wealthy superhero

AS ANOTHER BOAT show season tapers off and the superyacht industry looks towards the busy Caribbean months, yacht aficionados are busying themselves with the bright new things in tenders and toys. As the charter fleet heads ever closer toward 1,000 yachts in the market, those yachts with a savvy marketing gameplan stock their garage with an arsenal of toys to help them stand out. Here, then, are the outstanding examples in innovation, fun and engineering, which will be the most sought-after yacht accessories of 2014.

There's the jetpack, of course. Subject of much interest wherever it pops up, propelling its user along above water, the Jetlev R200 Water Jetpack is a superhero dream brought to life. It's the only water flight system approved for use by the US Coast Guard and, more importantly, is a total adrenalin rush for the user.

Strap in and take off for a personal flight experience which, at its maximum, climbs to eight and a half metres. Guests experience the sensation of weightlessness, levitating in the air, with no visible support from above or below and are able to use the jetpack to explore the coves and coastline around the yacht's anchor site. Although recommended for strong, healthy people, the Jetpack requires very little physical input from the user. Buckle in and prepare to fly.

WATER BABIES:
Uboat Worx' C-Explorer
2 (above) and the
Maori37 (below)

Keeping guests entertained on the yacht is one thing, transporting them to the yacht is another altogether. Tenders which reflect the style of the mothership are firmly in vogue and increasingly used to set the tone of the charter from the outset. The Maori37 is sleek and hungry-looking, its bold lines etched out in blocks of charcoal, red and silver. At 11m in length, there's room for two cabins and a bathroom. The Maori 37 has become a favourite choice for yachts that need a day tender with a bit of bite.

Dolvik's D28 Classical Sport Cruiser is a tender that sits at the other end of the spectrum. Smooth steering under all conditions, these hand-built mahogany boats are the epitome of classic elegance with unprecedented performance and speed.

And then there's U-Boat Worx' C-Explorer 2: part submarine, part transport and all fun. This two-person submarine cruises at three knots below the surface and is just the vehicle to ensure the yacht's guests have a truly immersive holiday. Pilot and passenger are perched on upright seats, while cabin pressure and humidity are kept comfortable by the submersible's air conditioning system. Guests will relish the ability to be able to explore what lies beneath.

From below, to above to alongside, this year's most wanted toys and tenders provide looks, performance and experiential thrills to a yacht's charter offering.
